

National Conference on “Exploring Critical Perspectives in Criminal law”

18 June - 19 June, 2018

Organized by
K.L. Arora Chair in Criminal Law &
Centre for Criminology & Victimology

The operation of criminal law and its institutions is evoking a serious debate among various sections of the society. The main reason is that there is a general feeling that the limits of application of the criminal law are getting seriously compromised which is resulting into the indiscriminate use of criminal law provisions. There are many instances where the use of criminal law become coercive. The core idea of use of force of criminal law and balancing of individual's fundamental rights is increasingly coming into question. Many kinds of human acts are increasingly brought into purview of criminal law operation. And this is without following the fundamental principles of criminalisation.

In other words, criminalization is becoming pervasive. Due process considerations in criminal law are getting relegated to the background and being dominated by crime control options. The selective application of criminal law is detrimental to the future of democracy. The decision to criminalisation or decriminalisation of several social issues like adultery, suicide, triple talaq, marital rape etc. have thrown several critical questions requiring a serious debate. The instances of not following the crime registration process, penchant for arrest, unfair investigation, denial of bail, withdrawal from prosecution, reliance on custodial options by law enforcement agencies are some of the coercive and critical developments in criminal law to be sifted concertedly.

This conference attempts to explore the broad range of critical perspectives in criminal law and actors involved in the criminal justice system.

Themes:

In view of the above following core theme are to be debating in the conference:

1. Emergence of critical perspectives in criminal law
2. Critique of normative and institutional perspectives in criminal law
